On the one hand, there is a specific psychiatric disorder
In which the patient believes that her or his mind or behavior
Is being influenced or controlled by a machine.

On the other hand, there have been various attempts by Scientists working for governments to develop machines capable
Of influencing or controlling the human mind and human behavior.

Diplomats working in the U. S. Embassy in Moscow in the third Quarter of the last century experienced symptoms attributed to a
Microwave signal directed at the Embassy, the so-called "Moscow
Signal," according to a news report I saw as a young man.

Writing in the Los Angeles Times in 1976, Robert C. Toth
Reports that U. S. Ambassador Walter J. Stoessel briefed the Staff of the U.S. Embassy in Moscow about the potential adverse Health effects, including psychological effects, of the Radiation to which it had been exposed.

Writing in "Science" in 1979, N. Wade documents that the United States became interested in the Moscow signal and that its
Inquiry into it was known as "Project Pandora."

A search of the archives of The New York Times returned no
Results for "Project Pandoa."

The State Department, according to the article in "Science,"
Conducted a study to determine whether the Moscow signal did any Genetic damage to the Embassy's Staff. The article goes on to Say that the State Department, however, told the Embassy's staff That it was doing a "viral study."

Since the dawn of the nuclear era, there has been extensive Human experimentation involving the health effects of radiation, Some involving unwitting civilian subjects. Some of this was Documented by the Pulitzer Prize winning journalist Eileen Welsome in her 1999 book, The Plutonium Files: America's Secret Medical Experiments in the Cold War.

Could it be that an occupational safety and health issue for U.S. diplomatic staff in Moscow was suppressed in an effort to Clear the way for reverse engineering of the Moscow signal by The CIA?

According to Kim Murphy, writing in the Los Angeles Times in 2005, "In 2001, President Vladimir Putin signed into law a bill Making it illegal to employ 'Electromagnetic, Infrasound ... Radiators' and other weapons of 'Psychotronic influence' with Intent to cause harm. An official note attached to the bill said Russian scientists were trying to create 'effective methods Of Influence of humans at a distance.'"

...And Congressman Dennis Kucinich has supported legislation which Would outlaw space-based weapons, including "the use of land-Based, sea-based, or space-based systems using radiation, Electromagnetic, psychotronic, sonic, laser, or other energies Directed at individual persons or targeted populations for the Purpose of information war, mood management, or mind control of Such persons or populations" and that was House Resolution 2977 In the 107th Congress.

Kim Murphy's article goes on to say that "Former President Boris N. Yeltsin's staff included a security consultant hired to Protect him from 'external psychophysical influence' after a Mysterious Antenna was found in his private office."

A comparison of the online library catalogs for University Research libraries at Princeton, The University of Pennsylvania,

Harvard, and the University of California turned up divergent Numbers of entries for works about the so-called "influencing Machine;" the illness associated with that phrase was apparently First identified as such by the Viennese psychoanalyst Victor Tausk, a contemporary Of Freud's, in A 1919 paper.

Franklin, which is The University of Pennsylvania's online Catalog of library holdings, returned no results for "the Influencing machine" whereas the University of California's Melvyl catalog returned very many.

Has there been an effort to persuade people who were being Experimented upon in an effort to improve mind control Technology that they were instead suffering from the influencing Machine illness?

Could it be that the people suffering from the influencing Machine illness and the scientists who have worked for Governments trying to develop technology which influences or Controls human behavior and the human mind are all mentally ill, Only that the second group is mentally ill in a socially Valorized, highly praised and rewarded way, whereas the first Are ill as the result of human experimentation by the second Group trying to improve its technology?

...And, ladies and gentleman, you might want to Google "The University of Pennsylvania"+"mind control technology..."

According to the psychoanalyst Victor Tausk, in the final Analysis the machine in the influencing machine illness turns Out to be a projection of the patient's genitalia.

I would also commend to your critical attention the life of Professor Herman Schwan: According to Kenneth Foster, writing in The journal "Biomedical Engineering Online" with an E-mail Address In the University of Pennsylvania's Department of Engineering and Applied Science, "Schwan Worked in 1936-37 ... With Telefunken on high frequency and microwave measuring Techniques. He became a research associate with the Max Planck Institute of Biophysics in Frankfurt in 1937, an Assistant Professor with the University of Frankfurt and Associate Director of the Max Planck Institute in 1946. In 1947 He came to The United States, working at the Aeromedical Equipment Laboratory of the U.S. Naval Base in Philadelphia. He Joined the University of Pennsylvania in 1950." For this University he Worked on biomedical engineering. He died in 2006 In Radnor, Only a few miles from where I speak to you tonight.
